History

The Jamison Farmhouse was constructed ca. 1864 by John N. Jamison who purchased the 202 acre tract in that year and built the house soon after. By the time of his death and the sale of the property to Minnie J. Hunt in 1885, the property was known as "Walnut Thicket." The property was purchased by the White family in 1940 and was continually improved until the 1960s when it was converted into a rental property.

Evaluation

The Jamison Farmhouse is not eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion A, B, C, or D. It is not associated with any event or individual significant at the local, state, or national level; it is not an outstanding or unique work of architecture; and the property does not have any archaeological potential and thus cannot yield information important in prehistory or history.

The property has had a complete loss of integrity due to extensive deterioration of both the buildings and their setting. The buildings' deterioration has adversely affected the property's integrity of design, materials, and workmanship. The construction of numerous surrounding residential developments have also had an adverse effect on the property's integrity, with the construction of these housing developments altering the property's setting as they have infilled and now dominate the historic viewshed and farmyard. The combined effects of these two events have led to the property's loss of integrity of both feeling and association.

Survey #: P.G. #81A-11 Building Date: ca. 1864, 1894

Building Name: Jamison Farmhouse

Location: 11423 Brandywine Road, Clinton, Maryland 20735

Private/Residence/Occupied/Fair/Inaccessible

Description

The Jamison house is west of Brandywine Road, on a long unpaved lane. It is a two-story frame, gable roofed structure with an "L" shaped plan, covered with aluminium siding, roofed with patterned tin, and having a boxed cornice which is covered by aluminum. The building is composed of two rectangular blocks set perpendicular and joined at the northwest end. The northeast block is one by three bays. The two bay, south-facing entrance facade of the block has 2/2 windows on the first and second stories and an entrance on the first bay, with two lower panels, an upper glass light, and a transom. It is sheltered by a hipped roof, "L" shaped entrance porch with support posts and cornice enclosed by aluminum. The southwest block is three by one bays with two bay east-facing entrance facade with 2/2 windows on the first and second stories and an entrance on the second bay. The entrance is sheltered by the "L" shaped entrance porch. There is an interior brick chimney centered at the gable ridge of the block. There is a complex of outbuildings to the west of the house, including small frame, gable roofed sheds, a large tobacco barn, a stable and a meat house.

Significance

The Jamison Farmhouse was constructed by John N. Jamison, who owned the 202 acre farm from 1864 to 1885. At Jamison's death, advertisement of the property's sale listed a four room house. Known as Walnut Thicket, the farm was bought by Mrs. Minnie J. Hunt, who added two rooms in 1894. The property has been owned by the White family since 1941. The house is typical of modest vernacular farmhouses built in the County in the mid to late 19th century. Typical details include the interior moldings and floor plan and the plain character of the exterior. Atypical is the placement of the entry facade in the ell rather than on the flat north elevation of the building. Possible cornice and porch detail on this building are masked by aluminum siding.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Jamison house is situated far west of Brandywine Road, on a slight rise and facing the road. It is reached by a long unpaved driveway. The house is a two-story frame, gable roofed structure with an "L" shaped plan. It is sided with aluminum siding. The roof is covered with patterned tin. The building has a boxed cornice covered by aluminum throughout.

The building is composed of two rectangular blocks, equal in size, set perpendicular to each other and joined at their northwest end. The east block is one-by-three bays, with one bay of 6/6 windows in the east facing gable end. The two bay, south facing entrance facade of the block has 2/2 windows on the first and second stories and an entrance on the first bay. The entrance door has two lower panels, and an upper glass light. It is surmounted by a transom and sheltered by a hipped roof, "L" shaped entrance porch with support posts and cornice enclosed by aluminum. The north-facing facade of the block has a cross-gable over the northwest corner. There is a hipped roof, one-story, five-bay enclosed porch across the first story. There is a brick foundation beneath the porch and a concrete foundation beneath the main block. There is a brick interior chimney centered at the gable ridge of the block.

The west block is three by one bays. The one-bay south gable end is composed of 6/6 windows on the first and second stories. The two bay east-facing entrance facade has 2/2 windows on the first and second stories and an entrance on the second bay. The entrance is sheltered by the "L" shaped entrance porch.

The west (rear) facade of the block is three bays of 2/2 windows. The third bay has a projecting one-story hipped roof vestibule containing the back entrance. A brick foundation is visible. There is an interior brick chimney centered at the gable ridge of the block.

The Jamison house has an ell-shaped interior plan. The original block of the house is on the west side and contains the kitchen and the living room on the first story with two bedrooms above. The stair hall and adjoining east parlor with bedroom above was added to the building in the early 1890's.

The original block of the house has classical revival moldings around the doorways, consisting of a plain board surround surmounted by a wide plain frieze and a raised ogee cornice molding. A wooden mantel in the south wall of the living room has a rectangular firebox opening flanked by flat pilasters with inset rectangular panels. The hearth has been blocked off and covered over. The mantel has a plain frieze and three layers of ogee molding beneath the mantel shelf, which is a modern replacement. The main entry door and east parlor has banded molding with bull's-eye corner blocks. The open-string stair has plain slender rectangular balusters and a rectangular newel post. The stair rises along the west wall of the hall, turns 90 degrees at a landing across the north end of the hall, turns 90 degrees again and rises along the east wall to the small second story hall. The east parlor has a plain wooden mantel in the west wall, surrounding a stove pipe connection to the chimney. There is a molded picture rail running around the walls at 3/4 room height.

On the second story, the southwest bedroom, in the original block of the house, can only be reached through the northwest bedroom which has access off of the stairhall. Before construction of the stairhall in the 1890's, there probably was a stair up from either the kitchen or living-room to one of the bedrooms, with access to the other bedroom through a connecting door in the central wall between the two. There is a plain wooden mantel in each room on the central connecting wall between the two rooms. Because this wall is not deep enough to have allowed a hearth in each room, these mantels probably were decorative and surrounded a stove pipe connection to the chimney.

There is a complex of outbuildings to the west of the house including a tobacco barn standing to the southwest, dating to the early 1940's. It is sided with vertical boards and roofed with standing-seam metal. Close to the house is a complex of three frame buildings, dating to the early 20th century. These include a combination cow stable, corn house and tractor shed, a grain house and an eight-stall stable. Just west of the house is a frame garage, dating to the early 20th century with an attached shed dating to the 1960's. Also, just west of the house is an early 20th century chicken house and an ell-shaped meat house dating to the 1940's.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The Jamison Farmhouse is a structure completed in two parts. The 202 acre property was purchased by John N. Jamison in 1864 and the house was probably constructed soon afterwards. At Jamison's death in 1885 the property was sold and the published advertisement of the sale lists a four-room house.¹ Known as Walnut Thicket, the farm was bought by Mrs. Minnie J. Hunt, who probably added two rooms, among other improvements, in 1894. The house now contains 6 rooms.²

The property has been owned by members of the White family from 1941 up through the present day.³ A modern brick rambler has been built south of the farmhouse to accommodate family members.

The Jamison House is a typical vernacular farmhouse, begun on a modest scale as a four room house in 1864 and enlarged with the addition of a stairhall, parlor and bedroom in the early 1890's. The resulting two-part structure is somewhat atypical because the main entry facade is in the ell, sheltered by a ell-shaped porch, rather than on the flat north facade. Interior details include door surrounds and mantels dating from the two periods of construction. The house was modest in such detail. All exterior detail such as the original siding material and porch decoration has been obscured or removed with the addition of aluminum siding.

The building is composed of two rectangular blocks, equal in size, set perpendicular to each other and joined at their northwest end. The north-east block is one by three bays, with one bay of 6/6 windows in the east facing gable end. The two bay, south facing entrance facade of the block has 2/2 windows on the first and second stories and an entrance on the first bay. The entrance door has two lower panels, and an upper glass light. It is surmounted by a transom and sheltered by a hipped roof, "L" shaped entrance porch with support posts and cornice enclosed by aluminum. The north-facing facade of the block has a cross-gable over the northwest corner. There is a 2/2 window centered beneath the gable on the second story. There is a hipped roof, one-story, five-bay addition across the first story. There is a brick foundation beneath the addition and a cement foundation beneath the main block. There is a brick interior chimney centered at the gable ridge of the block.

The southwest block is three by one bays. The one-bay south gable end is composed of 6/6 windows on the first and second stories. The two bay east-facing entrance facade has 2/2 windows on the first and second stories and an entrance on the second bay. The entrance is sheltered by the "L" shaped entrance porch.

The west (rear) facade of the block is three bays of 2/2 windows. The third bay has a projecting one-story hipped roof addition with a back entrance. A brick foundation is visible. There is an interior brick chimney centered at the gable ridge of the block.

There is a complex of outbuildings to the west of the house including 2 large tobacco barns and some small, frame, gable-roofed sheds. There is a small cross gable frame cottage directly northwest of the house. It is one-story, of two bays, resting on cement block piers.

The Jamison Farmhouse was probably completed in two parts. The property was owned by John N. Jamison from 1864 to 1885. At Jamison's death the property was sold and the published advertisement of the sale lists a four-room house.² Known as Walnut Thicket, the farm was bought by Mrs. Minnie J. Hunt, who probably added two rooms, among other improvements, in 1894. The house now contains 6 rooms.¹

The property has been owned by members of the White family since 1941.³ A modern brick rambler has been built south of the farmhouse to accommodate family members.

The Jamison House is typical of vernacular farmhouses built in Prince George's County in the late 19th century. The characteristics it shares with farmhouses built in this period include its "L" shaped plan, gable roof, frame two-story construction, one-story full facade entrance porch and austerity in architectural detail. Possible cornice and porch details on this building are masked by aluminum siding.
